BACKGROUND

The Kentucky Department of Fish and Wildlife Resources, hereafter known as KDFWR, produces a weekly television show that showcases and promotes opportunities for outdoorsmen and women across the state and region. Kentucky Afield TV is the longest running hunting and fishing show in the country, on air since 1953. The show reaches over 7.5 million households on a weekly basis, covering all of Kentucky, Atlanta, Nashville, and parts of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Virginia, West Virginia, and Alabama. The show's reach continues to grow exponentially, totaling over 62 million views (14.9 million in the last year) on YouTube and nearing 100,000 subscribers, with an expanding audience base via Roku.

Kentucky Afield reaches sportsmen and women of all ages, raises awareness of the issues they face, informs about programs and work KDFWR biologists complete, and educates on preserving Kentucky's natural resources for years to come. This is done by promoting hunting, fishing, and trapping opportunities throughout the state.

Kentucky Afield produces approximately forty new thirty minute episodes each year, totaling sixty to eighty new segments. This provides for numerous opportunities for products to be used in a Kentucky Afield segment.
